Kids Who Are Changing The World

Synopsis

The inspiring stories of 45 young heroes who have made an impact on our planet. Forty-five young people from around the world (including twelve from the U.S. and four from Canada) are doing something every day to make the world a better place. They discovered issues that concerned them and did something about it. With skills ranging from singing, drawing, and painting to fund-raising, public demonstrations, and events, they have fought climate change and pollution, and worked to protect animals and their natural habitats. This inspiring book also includes reference materials and suggestions on how readers can get involved.

Gr 3-6 • This slim but powerful volume profiles 45 young environmental activists who have initiated projects that are changing the world. Tween and teen activists ages nine through 16 and from countries around the world are featured, with a balance of gender, age, and ethnicity. Each two-to-four page profile includes an attention-grabbing tagline, biographical information, a one-line objective, a captioned photograph (typically a landscape), and a section in which the activist responds to prompts such as "My Advice" and "What I Am Most Proud Of." Pull-out quotations, websites, sidebars of background information, and several sections of shorter profiles complete the layout. Especially intriguing are projects that involve science (collecting water samples to help an international climate change study), the arts (painting, music, theater, and dance), and local social action (convincing one's school to replace disposable water bottles with reusable ones). The book acknowledges that some stories have multiple sides ("the pipeline and its construction will provide work for some people but...") and recognizes that sometimes success can require multiple attempts, resulting in an optimistic but well-rounded tone. Mentions of organizations large and small emphasize the power of community and will perhaps leave readers curious about how their peers were able to attend major international summits. Although the book lacks internal subdivisions, it will easily inspire readers to pursue their own environmental action projects.

" [An] inspiring and upbeat volume... the book suggests that curiosity, creativity, and mindfulness are key ingredients in making an impact." - Publishers Weekly"

[An] inspiring compilation of stories...photographs are dynamic and stunning." - Booklist"

[A] powerful volume... it will easily inspire readers to pursue their own environmental action projects." - School Library Journal"

It's impressive to see the variety of kids that author Anne Jankeliowitch features: children – some still in grade school, some in non-traditional learning environments – who saw a need and acted upon it, proving there is no age or ability limit to make a difference... and when you add in photography by Yann Arthus-Bertrand, you've got a hopeful, optimistic winner to read." - Bookworm Sez"

This is a very inspiring non-fiction book... it shares stories about young people who are doing incredible things to make the environment a better place." - San Francisco Book Review

Great book to use to prompt kids toward taking action.

With Democrats and Republicans

at a stalemate, decisions that will affect our future are not being made, and we, the people, are going to suffer because of it. In the chaos of constant criticism and debate regarding global warming and climate change, sometimes the best voices to listen to are the most innocent. Here are forty-five children who are trying to make a difference with our environment, which includes everything from pollution to animal endangerment. These awesome kids step forward to provide solutions to our most pressing environmental issues. Each young person is given the chance to express his/her beliefs about the topic and possible solutions to the problem. With breathtaking photography to colorfully illustrate what is at stake, these forty-five brave young people try to change the world. Will you listen?

This book for upper elementary/middle school readers profiles 45 young people who have taken action to help protect the environment. Nice truly global selection of included kids whose projects are described in short interviews as well as brief descriptions. Highly readable.
