Customer Reviews

'Reliable and very informative for a five week wander around a less well travelled country. As internet cafes shrink and wifi fails to reach many parts, a book like this gives you the confidence to explore.' 5 stars -- Consumer review * *

Richard Arghiris is a freelance writer, journalist, blogger, and long-term traveler. He has been wandering the highways and unpaved back roads of Central America since 2003, contributing to a range of Footprint titles and a host of websites, magazines and newspapers, including The Independent, The Observer, Perceptive Travel and Intercontinental Cry. His blog, www.unseenamericas.com, features news reports, narrative journalism and street photography from the sketchy US-Mexico border to the teeming rainforests of Panama.

Nice little booklet, good information. Not a lot of pictures and fairly vague price indications though. Although I have to admit that prices do change a lot, so this might actually reflect it better in the end.

Nice book. Shows all the good spots and navigating while travelling to Nicaragua. The pages are very thick and sturdy and glossy with a lot of pictures. A lot of information, but not a lot of the information that I need.

Great book, nice range of choices. They explored high and low end hotels, restaurants and activities.
