'This new monograph will make a valuable contribution to the study and understanding of the plurality of British sculpture in the 20th century, and of an important but often forgotten figure in its history. Sarah Crellin's text is perceptive and thoughtful in its critical analysis of Wheeler, and the complete catalogue of his sculpture that follows is exemplary. Good photography is crucial for the success of a sculpture monograph, and here the high production values are just what are needed.'

--Apollo Magazine

Sarah Crellin's research interests centre on twentieth-century British sculpture. Her published writings include studies of facial masking and reconstructive surgery in the Great War (Sculpture Journal) and of architecture artisans and applied sculpture (Infrastructures: 1925-50, Sculpture in 20th-century Britain, Henry Moore Institute); Let there be history: Epstein's BMA House sculpture appeared in the catalogue of the Royal Academy exhibition, Modern British Sculpture, 2011.
